MEETING OBJECTIVES:

- Participants will explain the science of physiological arousal and its escalation when parents and children focus on extreme distress together without a shift to coping (e.g., “co-rumination”).
- Participants will validate their patients’ aversive experiences while also encouraging them to shift attention to coping and exploring ideas for emotional regulation.
- Participants will use motivational interviewing techniques to elicit the goal of reducing suffering for encouraging parents in the “change agenda” of both avoiding symptom accommodation and co-rumination and practicing coping strategies.
- In combination with the history, use appropriate testing to diagnose iron deficiency anemia, and apply current understanding of iron metabolism to optimize treatment
- Apply understanding of hemoglobin patterns in thalassemia syndromes to order and interpret thalassemia testing, counsel families, and refer when appropriate
- Understand common thrombophilias and the relevance of family history to decide which patients to test, and which tests to perform.
- Recognize risks of thrombosis, implications for menstrual and contraceptive management, and when to consider anticoagulant prophylaxis for patients with a thrombophilia or positive family history of thrombosis.
- Manage child with antenatally diagnosed hydronephrosis
- Risk stratified management of vesicoureteral reflux
- Understand the prevalence and natural history of CMV associated hearing loss
- Engage with evolving research into detection, prevention and treatment of congenital CMV

- Incorporate multifaceted approach to understanding the pathophysiology and sequela of sleep challenges in adolescence.
- Approach treatment strategies at individual and community levels.
- Learners will understand the various ways that nicotine, cannabis, and “legal highs” are used and will be able to adequately counsel their patients on short and long term effects.
- Learners will be able to identify clinical patterns of drug use and drug paraphernalia.
- Understand the rationale for careful followup, dietary manipulation, and endoscopy in the management of pediatric EoE.
- Understand the risks and benefits of PPI use and how to position a PPI in the treatment of pediatric EoE.
- Participants will be able to identify three types of interaction that represent parent-child attunement or reciprocity and how that is fundamental to infant development.
- Participants will learn one strategy to help parents learn about attunement by providing specific, positive verbal feedback to parents.
